Anterior cruciate ligament The term cruciate is Latin for cross. The anterior cruciate ligament is one of the four main ligaments of the knee, providing 85% of the restraining force to anterior tibial displacement at 30 and 90° of knee flexion. In the quadruped stifle joint (homologous to the knee), based on its anatomical position, it is also referred to as the cranial cruciate ligament. The two ligaments are called "cruciform" ligaments, as they are arranged in a crossed formation. The ACL is the most frequently injured ligament in the knee. This name is fitting because the ACL crosses the posterior cruciate ligament to form an "X". Recovery time usually ranges between The anterior cruciate ligament (ACL) is one of the cruciate ligaments in the human knee. Once the graft is pulled through the bone tunnels, two screws are placed into the tibial and femoral bone tunnel. It is composed of strong, fibrous material and assists in controlling excessive motion by limiting mobility of the joint 41c8e12f48
