A four-fold increase in the protein is an indicator of poor prognosis in people hospitalized with COVID-19. caad079fd6

Age Adjusted D Dimer

D-dimer concentration may be determined by a blood test to help diagnose thrombosis. Since its introduction in the 1990s, it has become an important test performed in people with suspected thrombotic disorders, such as venous thromboembolism. While a negative result practically rules out thrombosis, a positive result can indicate thrombosis but does not exclude other potential causes. Its main use, therefore, is to exclude thromboembolic disease where the probability is low. caad079fd6
