What is commonly known as no-decompression diving, or more accurately no-stop decompression, relies on limiting ascent rate for avoidance of excessive bubble formation. Staged decompression may include deep stops depending on the theoretical model used for calculating the ascent schedule. Decompression practice Divers follow a decompression model to allow the release of excess inert gases dissolved in their body tissues at acceptable risk, which accumulated as a result of breathing at ambient pressures greater than surface atmospheric pressure. A history of diving during early stages of pregnancy is not considered likely to have adverse effects on the fetus, but To prevent or minimize decompression sickness, divers must properly plan, conduct, and monitor decompression. by not diving when pregnant. Decompression models take into account variables such as depth and time of dive, breathing gasses, altitude, and equipment to develop appropriate procedures for safe ascent 3fb8140e08
