

Compeed Cold Sore Patches

In 1984, Lars Backsell, while working as a General Manager at Coloplast, conducted a clinical trial with the Swedish army to test a prototype that developed a skin barrier for bandaging purposes based on hydrocolloid technology. The initial product used an ostomy sheet and was sold as a blister-protective bandage through pharmacies to consumers. 7b616e590a In 1986, Compeed was first sold in Sweden before being registered in the United States in the category of antiseptic cleaning tissues as a trademark under serial number 73589785. Compeed got Food and Drug Administration-approval in 1988. 7b616e590a The product was originally designed for treating ostomy patients. 7b616e590a == History == 7b616e590a In 2002, "Compeed X-TREME Flex" plaster by Jan Marcussen was included in the art museum MoMA design collection.
