Lichtenberg figure The study of planar Lichtenberg figures along insulating surfaces and 3D electrical trees within insulating materials often provides engineers with valuable insights for improving the long-term reliability of high-voltage equipment. Lichtenberg figures are often associated with the progressive deterioration of high-voltage components and equipment. Lichtenberg figures are now known to occur on or within solids, liquids, and gases during electrical breakdown.

"The Fractal Nature of Lightning: An Investigation of the Fractal Relationship of the Structure of Lightning to Terrain" by Brian Clay Graham-Jones, A Lichtenberg figure (German: Lichtenberg-Figur), or Lichtenberg dust figure, is a branching electric discharge that sometimes appears on the surface or in the interior of insulating materials b31e882121

Circassian paganism It is based on worshipping the supreme god Thashkho (Тхэшхо) and other deities under his rule, to each of whom is attributed an element, action or item of veneration and control. The religion also strongly focuses on the perfection of the soul, developing spiritual maturity and honour until a practitioner, in union with their ancestors. The ancient pagan religion of the Circassians should not be mistaken with the secular Khabze code; doing so is considered a "common mistake". Turkish traveler Evliya Çelebi wrote: After performing Circassian paganism is the ethnic religion of the Circassians. the bodies have completely decomposed. They consider the person struck by lightning to be a saint

Count Dracula's remains lie on a stone plinth in a chamber in his castle. The chamber can be accessed only through the window, set high in his castle wall. A large bat flies in and hovers over the plinth, regurgitating blood onto the Count's remains. The remains start to interact and bond with the dripped blood. Within seconds, Dracula is once more resurrected.

The term "thunderbolt" adds the notion of a loud thunderclap accompanying a lightning flash, while the term "lightning bolt" — which refers directly to the electrical discharge — does not. Fontus was the son of Juturna and Janus. Numa Pompilius, second king of Rome, was supposed to have been buried near the altar of Fontus (ara Fontis) on the Janiculum. William Warde Fowler observed that between 259 and 241 BC, cults were founded for Juturna, Fons, and the Tempestates, all having to do with sources of water. As a god of pure water, Fons can be placed in opposition to Liber as a god of wine identified with Bacchus.

religion. The foundation of this religion is the worship of the chief god, Thashkho (Adyghe: Тхъэшхо, lit. 'Great God'). Some classify this religion as polytheistic or henotheistic, while a minority as monotheistic. Thashkho has attributes such as "needed by all, but needing no one," "creating from nothing, the multiplier," and "allowing the cycle of the universe." All beings are essentially one and part of an eternal cycle; only Thashkho, the creator, is unaffected by this cycle. Prayers to Thashkho were made as "Good God, we wretches pray... b31e882121 In 1777, Lichtenberg built a large electrophorus to generate high-voltage static electricity through induction. Henrietta was skeptical and accused Henry of faking his blindness. Lichtenberg, who originally discovered and studied them. When they were first discovered, it was thought that their characteristic shapes might help to reveal the nature of positive and negative electric "fluids".
