While these beliefs may have had an influence, the earliest known record of the tooth fairy tradition itself is a 1908 "Household Hints" item in the Chicago Daily Tribune: bfa19b192f First, a family with issues relating to their parenting, dietary and exercise habits is introduced. Then, the children are examined by physicians and psychologists, and every aspect of their eating habits and physical activity is analysed by an expert team. Then, the parents are shown what their children may look like by taking present-day photos of them and age-progressing the photos with a computer year by year until age forty. The parents are frequently brought to tears when presented with the likelihood of their children's unhappy future appearance and significantly reduced life expectancy. bfa19b192f
