Extensive research has been done through tracking sleep clinically as well as surveying the general population. From the data, scientists have proposed several "optimal" and "sub-optimal" sleep positions depending on said persons mental or physical issues. The most researched and mentioned sleep positions are the lateral (side sleeping, often in a fetal or semi-fetal configuration), supine (faced upwards), and prone (faced downwards) positions, as those positions come naturally when trying to sleep. a53198e3d2
