Common causes include inflammation of the pulp (usually in response to tooth decay, dental trauma, or other factors), dentin hypersensitivity, apical periodontitis (inflammation of the periodontal ligament and alveolar bone around the root apex), dental abscesses (localized collections of pus), alveolar osteitis ("dry socket", a possible complication of tooth extraction), acute necrotizing ulcerative gingivitis (a gum infection), and temporomandibular disorder. e74db97ef0 Hey guys, new around here. I decided to work on expanding this article because of the surprisingly (previous) little writing on it and the relatively good coverage in literature about Garudimimus. Surely, I should have prepared the article before the GA nomination, so I'm here kinda rectifying my fault. As discussed with Jens Lallensack, there are several issues across the article that may be quickly fixed with more editors here. Don't bother on fixing the plural as I'll be doing it. The lead states that "This deinocheirid placement of Garudimimus has been widely corroborated in most subsequent analyses.", the taxobox puts in it Deinocoelidae, and the classification section gives the garudimimid idea about two sentences before essentially dismissing it as if it has been rejected or something. As icing on the cake we get two cladograms for the deinocoelid idea, which both seems unnecessary and further reinforces it as the "correct" position.
