Known in Chinese as "bitter buckwheat" (Chinese: 苦荞; pinyin: kǔqiáomài) and in Japan as dattan-soba (タタンソバ; 'Tartary buckwheat'), the plant was domesticated as a crop in East Asia and is also being cultivated in Europe and North America. While it is an unfamiliar food in the West, it is common in the Himalayan region today, as well as other regions in Southwest China such as Sichuan province. Tartary buckwheat is commonly roasted to make buckwheat tea, and it can also be distilled to make alcohol. While not traditionally eaten in Japan, due to its high rutin content it was briefly popular as a health fad in Japan in the late 1990s... Groats can also be produced from pseudocereal seeds such as buckwheat. Much like grits or potatoes, the ploye was originally a simple carbohydrate filler food for the local population. It was very cheap, easy to make, and with local toppings, such as maple syrup, brown sugar or cretons, could vary in taste. This staple is often eaten with baked beans. Over time, however, it simply became a traditional dish.

Despite its name, buckwheat is not closely related to wheat, nor is it a cereal or a member of the grass family. It is related to sorrel, knotweed, and rhubarb. Buckwheat is considered a pseudocereal because the high starch content of the seeds enables buckwheat to be cooked and consumed like a cereal. Some people, especially in Japan, are seriously allergic to buckwheat, and it has been implicated as a cause of dry eye disease and potential blindness when used in dog food. dac7158c7b
