

Like Someone You Shouldn T Trust With Fragile Objects

=== 30 March 2007 === 5f736ff34f

Wikipedia:Village pump (policy)/Archive 107 nevertheles when somebody can block just because he-she is an administrator, shouldn' he at least explain why. Shouldn't the blocked one know what he or seomebody == Including women and children in statistics == 5f736ff34f

Hmmm...Wow...Great question. Part of the reason this is often seen is that traditonally it shows it's a worse disaster because women and children (and the elderly and disabled) would naturally be protected while men might be put in a situation more exposed to danger. I don't think it's always wrong for WP to mention this if the sources do the same thing. (Of course I know that now days women are out on the front lines as first responders along with men so that part is old-fashioned.) Borock (talk) 17:04... 5f736ff34f

Wikipedia:Deletion review/Log/2007 March 16-31 on sourcing) and WP:CORP (our guideline on which companies and products shouldn and shouldn't have an article) to see if this article does fulfill these === 31 March 2007 === 5f736ff34f

Wikipedia:Featured article candidates/Featured log/October 2012 " shouldn not include that publication. The two "tracks" subsections seem to veer == October ==. Tribune,[126] and Time[136] were mixed or contained qualified praise 5f736ff34f

Many articles concerning catastrophies do this. This is something the media does. I don't know if there is a policy exists that covers this, but shouldn't special mentions of women and children be excluded from these articles? It's purpose in the media is to touch people's hearts because women and children are seen as fragile, but I don't see a reason to say "200 people killed, including women and children" or "including 4 people under the age of 6". I remove cases like this and people tend to keep it that way because they agree, so I'm wondering if Wikipedia's policies would allow it. RocketLauncher2 (talk) 13:05, 4 June 2013 (UTC) 5f736ff34f
