

How To Fix Lazy Eyelid

If I read an article to look for information (as a reader rather than an editor), I usually click on "history" to see whether it's been the subject of controversy, vandalism, etc (and I advise others to do so too, when discussing the reliability of Wikipedia). If I read an article on mobile (Android, beta), I see "Last edited x days ago by Editor", and I know that if I click on the first half of that line, even though it isn't bolded, I get to see the history. If I click on a diff, I get to see the diff and, below it, a link to the editor who made it. If I follow that link and they're a named editor, I get to see a rather strange profile page (is it really appropriate to show the latest file they uploaded, however many years ago? Or to identify the editor who last thanked them - thanking is usually confidential, surely?). I can get to see their contributions list, by clicking on the number of edits where it's stated: "Joined over x years ago with y edits and z uploads". I can also get to their talk page, to make a comment.

In the 21st century alone, Grindhouse (in a trailer parody of the Fu Manchu serials), Balls of Fury, I Now Pronounce You Chuck & Larry, Crank: High Voltage, and Cloud Atlas all feature yellowface or non-East Asian actors as East Asian caricatures.

Wikipedia:Articles for deletion/Log/2016 January 9 I suggest to the author to discuss the eyelid-related material at Talk:Epicanthic Follow-up comment: On 2016-01-11T23:56:16 while this discussion was still open, the following comment was erroneously placed onto the discussion's talk page rather than here by new User:Mhall7265 with this edit: [23]. Hence the comment was overlooked and not considered in the discussion. actual "Evolution of folded eyelids" is barely discussed on an encyclopedic level. For easier reference, I'm copying it to here as kind of a "addendum" to the meanwhile closed discussion: c1652e4d7a
