Ramsay Clinic New Farm

March 1839 – 21 May 1922) was a Canadian farmer, dentist, and reformer who is credited as being Canada's "father of dental public health". Over his career, he had operated a free-of-charge dental clinic for Toronto's poor, served as the first dentist of record at the Hospital for Sick Children, and lobbied the City of Toronto to implement routine dental exams of schoolchildren, as well as to operate the first free public dental clinic in Canada.

A firm believer in the importance of oral health in children, Adams devoted his career to caring for the often neglected teeth of school children. He wrote a paper about the dire state of dental care in children, and lobbied his peers and the municipal government to take action. After his own free dental clinic was shut down by the city due to unpaid taxes, Adams became a dental missionary, travelling around the world to treat the poor and needy. His lobbying efforts paid off, as the Toronto Board of Education began inspecting the teeth of schoolchildren in 1911, and the city opened its own free dental clinic two years later.

Adams graduated from Michigan State University with a Bachelor of Arts in history in 1959. He then...
