Term (logic) In particular, terms appear as components of a formula. These properties In mathematical logic, a term is an arrangement of dependent/bound symbols that denotes a mathematical object within an expression/formula. called a linear term. This is analogous to natural language, where a noun phrase refers to an object and a whole sentence refers to a fact. For example, $2+2$ is a ground term and hence also a linear term, $x \cdot (n+1)$ is a linear term, $n \cdot (n+1)$ is a non-linear term

Off West End The term is usually used synonymously with the more widespread term fringe (or, specifically, the London Fringe), but sometimes is also used to refer to more mainstream or commercial theatre which is located within London but outside the centre, or to especially small and non-commercial theatres located within the centre. The term emerged relatively recently, having been coined after the similar American term "off-Broadway" (though without the same strict definition). According to London Theatre, "Smaller theatres, including many pub theatres, are called fringe, although some of these small theatres are also called off West End, particularly those located in the West End of London, where most of the big commercial theatres are. Off West End refers to theatres in London which are not included as West End theatres. The term emerged relatively recently, having been coined after the Off West End refers to theatres in London which are not included as West End theatres. These small theatres can vary in size, with seating capacities of around 40 to 400. "

An expression formed by applying a predicate symbol to an appropriate number of terms is called an atomic formula, which evaluates to true or false in bivalent logics, given an interpretation.

A first-order term is recursively constructed from constant symbols, variable symbols, and function symbols. At the University of Sydney, it was the second and coldest of the three terms, running from the 24th to the 34th Mondays of the year (late May to early August) in the middle of winter, until Sydney changed over to the two semester system in 1989.

(Description == According to a 2020 analysis, nearly one in four incumbents who face term limits seek to circumvent the term limits through various strategies, including constitutional amendments, working with the judiciary to reinterpret the term limits, let a placeholder govern for the incumbent, and cancelling or delaying elections. Incumbents that seek to circumvent term limits frequently use repression of the opposition, electoral manipulation and foreign support to enable their circumvention. According to a 2025 research project, attempts to circumvent term limits had become increasingly prevalent in African states over time, with few such attempts prior to 2000 and many such attempts post-2000. == Courts... == At the University of Oxford, following the resolution made by Council

From a legal perspective, the Federal Records Act (FRA) of 1950 mandates federal agencies to preserve public copies of all the materials they created. The Federal Depository Library Program administered by the US Government Printing Office (GPO) is responsible for distributing these copies to a network of libraries nationwide with the goal of long-term preservation and access. However, FRA rulings do not apply to electronic records, leaving websites, online articles, datasets, and other forms of information particularly vulnerable to permanent loss.
