exploring her identity and the complexities that come with it. Her work explores these intersections through her sculptures, writing, curation and performance. about a woman named Diane who is struggling with her mental health, hiding her learning disability from her coworkers and girlfriend all while living Persimmon Blackbridge (born 1951) is a Canadian writer and artist whose work focuses on feminist, lesbian, disability and mental health issues. She identifies herself as a lesbian, a person with a disability, and a feminist. Blackbridge's struggle with her mental health has become a large part of her practice, and she uses her experience with mental health institutions to address her perspective on them. Her novels follow characters that are very similar to Blackbridge's own life experiences, allowing her to write honestly about her perspective. Her contributions to projects like this help destigmatize the attitudes towards people with disabilities. Blackbridge is involved in the film, SHAMELESS: The Art of Disability exploring the complexity of living with a disability f0a3005d43
