Canadian cuisine The advent of European explorers and settlers, first on the east coast and then throughout the wider territories of New France, British North America and Canada, saw the melding of foreign recipes, cooking techniques, and ingredients with indigenous flora and fauna. Modern Canadian cuisine has maintained this dedication to local ingredients and terroir, as exemplified in the naming of specific ingredients based on their locale, such as Malpeque oysters or Alberta beef. Accordingly, Canadian cuisine privileges the quality of ingredients and regionality, and may be broadly defined as a national tradition of "creole" culinary practices, based on the complex multicultural and geographically diverse nature of both historical and contemporary Canadian society. 241 Pizza Boston Pizza Freshslice Pizza Gabriel Pizza Greco Pizza Restaurant King of Donair Mikes Mother's Pizza Panago Pizza 73 Pizza Delight Pizza Nova Canadian cuisine consists of the cooking traditions and practices of Canada, with regional variances around the country. There are two prevailing theories on who opened the first dedicated fish-and-chip shop; both date to the 1860s. Conventionally it is believed to have originated with an Eastern European Jewish family named Malin, who lived in Bow, London. The family sold fried potatoes from their house to supplement income from their rug-weaving business. Their son, 13-year-old Joseph Malin, came up with the idea of buying fish from a local fried-fish shop and hawking the two together from a tray hung around his neck as he walked the streets of London. They opened a shop called "Malin's in Bow".
