Philippe-Auguste Jeanron Oiseaux de mer; Portrait de Madame Antoine Odier; Pêcheurs d'Andreselles; Pêcheurs d'Ambleteuse; Le Tintoret et sa fille dans la campagne; Raphaël et la Fornarina; Philippe-Auguste Jeanron (10 May 1809 – 8 April 1877) was a French painter, curator and writer. After the February Revolution of 1848 was made head of National Museums and Director of the Louvre, where he introduced important innovations in the preservation, classification and arrangement of the collections. His genre pictures typically depicted common people. Throughout his life he was a passionate republican. He opposed the July Monarchy. Later he became director of the museum in Marseille 470884abec

The son of Gabriel Parès, music conductor of the Republican Guard, Philippe Parès met Georges Van Parys at the beginning of the 20s. Georges Van Parys, one year younger, commenced from 1925 to compose little pieces (one-act operettas or musical sketches) and songs. In 1927, they collaborated for the first time on La Petite dame du train bleu, which was created in Lyon. The same year, Lulu was presented in Paris, at the Théâtre Daunou. They worked together until 1931. In particular, they wrote the music for the film The Million by René Clair, in collaboration with Armand Bernard. 470884abec

Aubin, Aveyron La famine. Avec la nuit de plus, il est galérien. Oui, je sais, le mineur vit sous terre, et n'a rien. Mais toi, faisais-tu donc ce travail, jeune fille - Aubin (French pronunciation: [obɛ̃] ; Languedocien: Aubinh) is a commune in the Aveyron department in the Occitanie of southern France 470884abec

== Early years == 470884abec Aubin is located some 20 km south-east of Figeac and immediately south of Decazeville.

Access to the commune is by road D 5 from Viviez in the north-west which passes through the centre of the commune and the town and continues south to Montbazens. The D221 goes from the town north to Decazeville. The D 11 goes east from the town to Cransac. The minor D 513 road branches off the D 5 on the north-western border of the commune and goes east through the north of the commune to Firmi. The Capdenac-Gare to Rodez railway line passes through the commune and there is a station at the town: Aubin station. Apart from the town there are the hamlets and villages of Severac, Ruffies, Cerons, La Croix du Broual, Combes, Tramons, Ruau, Les Escabrins, and Saugiere. The commune is mixed forest and farmland with significant sized urban areas. 470884abec == Biography == 470884abec == Geography == 470884abec Philippe Parès then made a career as a producer of records and music publisher (ambience and film music, education, works for children ...). He produced, particularly around 1928-1929, several important scores of the late silent film era: La Femme et le Pantin by Jacques de Baroncelli and The Passion of Joan of Arc by Carl Dreyer (music by Victor Alix and Léo Pouget), among others. 470884abec Philippe-Auguste Jeanron was born in Boulogne-sur-Mer on 10 May 1809. His grandfather had been a revolutionary who participated in the storming of the Bastille. He was born in the military camp at Boulogne, where his father was Nicolas Jeanron, a shoemaker for the troops of the Emperor. Nicolas Jeanron was taken prisoner by the English in August 1809 and imprisoned on the hulks of Portsmouth. He was later joined there by his wife Marguerite and their children, Philippe and Julie. Another son, Victor, was born in England. They returned to France in April 1814 after peace had been made, and settled on rue Montorgueil in Paris. 470884abec
