The Spanish name Bibrambla or Bibarrambla comes from the gate's Arabic name, Bab al-Ramla, meaning "Gate of Sand" or "Gate of the Sandbank". The gate was later nicknamed "Arch of the Ears" (Spanish: Arco de las Orejas). Local legend suggests that this name is linked to the tradition of taking the ears (and other body parts) of executed criminals and hanging them for display.

Another theory suggests that during the reign of Philip IV of Spain, a floating tablao carrying too many people had sunk. The ears of dead women were mutilated in an effort to remove their earrings, giving the Gate of the Ears its name. It borders Valdemorillo and Villanueva del Pardillo to the North, Majadahonda, Boadilla del Monte and Villaviciosa de Odón to the East, Brunete to the South and borders Quijorna to the West... == Best Song ==

The band's lyrics and compositions are written primarily by Xabi San Martín as well as by Pablo Benegas. The main source for the siege of Oreja is the contemporary Chronica Adefonsi imperatoris, a narrative of Alfonso's reign in two books. According to this source, at the time it was "the largest campaign that had been conducted in the combined regions of Toledo and Extremadura." Historian

Bernard Reilly has succinctly explained the "virtues and vices" of the Chronica as a reliable historical account: ". . . the second book of the [Chronica] is made up largely of a series of popular tales originally composed separately and only subsequently tacked together in a literary, Latin text appended to the more traditional and staid annals that form most of its first book. The compiler has often scarcely bothered to reconcile his materials, much... c4d55ba8c8
