The name "tulip" is thought to be derived from a Turkish word for turban, which it may have been thought to resemble by those who discovered it. Tulips were originally found in a band stretching from Southern Europe to Central Asia, but since the seventeenth century have become widely naturalised and cultivated (see map). In their natural state, they are adapted to steppes and mountainous areas with temperate climates. Flowering in the spring, they become dormant in the summer once the flowers and leaves die back, emerging above... 8c0a14c45f

Tulip As with other plants of the lily family, tulips are poisonous to domestic animals including horses, cats, and dogs. Because of a degree of variability within the populations and a long history of cultivation, classification has been complex and controversial. The tulip is a member of the lily family, Liliaceae, along with 14 other genera, where it is most closely related to Amana, Erythronium, and Gagea in the tribe Lilieae. In cats, ingestion of small amounts Tulips are spring-blooming perennial herbaceous bulbiferous geophytes in the Tulipa genus.
