Lazarus taxon Paul Wignall and Michael Benton defined Lazarus taxa as, "At times of biotic crisis many taxa go extinct, but others only temporarily disappeared from the fossil record, often for intervals measured in millions of years, before reappearing unchanged". Likewise in conservation biology and ecology, it can refer to species or populations that were mistakenly thought to be extinct, and are rediscovered to be still living. Paul. C. The term Lazarus taxon was coined by Karl W. look-alike that has supplanted an extinct taxon through convergent evolution. A zombie taxon is a taxon that contains specimens that have been collected from strata In paleontology, a Lazarus taxon (plural taxa) is a taxon that disappears for one or more periods from the fossil record, only to appear again either in later fossil records, or as actual living organisms, and often in isolated, obscure, or otherwise very specialized habitats. Earlier work also supports the concept though without using the name Lazarus taxon, like work by Christopher R. Flessa and David Jablonski in 1983 and was then expanded by Jablonski in 1986 0925588184

The phylum is notable for containing the giant viruses. There are nine families of NCLDV's that all share certain genomic and structural characteristics; however, it is uncertain whether the similarities of the different families of this group have a common viral ancestor. One feature of this group is a large genome and the presence of many genes involved in DNA repair, DNA replication, transcription, and translation. Typically, viruses with smaller genomes do not contain genes for these processes. Most of the viruses in this family also replicate in both the host's nucleus and cytoplasm, thus the name nucleocytoplasmic. 0925588184 Lazarus taxa are observational artifacts that appear to occur either because of (local) extinction, later... 0925588184 == Potential explanations == 0925588184 Outside acting, Kim is the founder and CEO of a non-profit organization Gilstory that focuses on preserving cultural heritage, promoting arts and raising special purpose relief funds.
