Hohner Pianet The Pianet production consisted of two distinctly different mechanism groups with characteristically different sound. This led to Hohner to producing the Combo Pianet model in 1972. The second group from 1977 until the end of production used rolled spring-steel reeds, electro-magnetic pick-ups, and moulded silicone rubber activation pads. The Pianet was a variant of his earlier reed-based Hohner electric piano, the Cembalet, which, like the Pianet, was intended for home use. It was designed for the performing musician, without legs, and intended to be placed The Hohner Pianet is a type of electro-mechanical piano built by the Hohner company of Trossingen, West Germany and designed by Ernst Zacharias.
