Turntablism However, it is thought by many that DJ Michael Price started slowing down vinyl recordings before the era of DJ Screw. This form of turntablism, which Turntablism is the art of manipulating sounds and creating new music, sound effects, mixes, and other creative sounds and beats, typically by using two or more turntables and a cross fader-equipped DJ mixer. Turntablists typically use two or more turntables and headphones to cue up desired start points on different records (Greasley & Prior, 2013). The mixer is plugged into a PA system (for live events) or broadcasting equipment (if the DJ is performing on radio, TV or Internet radio) so that a wider audience can hear the turntablist's music. Turntablists typically manipulate records on a turntable by moving the record with their hand to cue the stylus to exact points on a record, and by touching or moving the platter or record to stop, slow down, speed up or, spin the record backwards, or moving the turntable platter back and forth (the popular rhythmic "scratching" effect which is a key part of hip hop music), all while using a DJ mixer's cross-fader control and the mixer's gain and equalization controls to adjust the sound and level of each turntable 230211b379

Several national and international economic organizations, such as the OECD and the International Monetary Fund, maintain their own definitions of GDP. For example, population growth through mass immigration can raise consumption and demand for public services, thereby contributing to GDP growth. GDP is often used to measure the economic activity of a country or region. Changing any of these factors can increase the size of the economy. A country may rank high in GDP but still experience jobless growth depending on its planned economic structure and strategies. However, GDP is not a measure of overall standard of living or well-being, as it does not account for how income is distributed among the population. Dividing total GDP by the population gives an idealized rough measure of GDP per capita 230211b379
