== History == 94bd530616 The descendants of these New Mexican settlers make up an ethnic community of approximately 340,000 in New Mexico, with others throughout the historical Spanish territorial claim of Nuevo México. Alongside Californios and Tejanos, they are part of the larger Hispanic community of the United States, who have lived in the American Southwest since the 16th century. These groups are differentiated by time period from the population of Mexican Americans that arrived after the Mexican-American War and later Mexican Revolution. They also differ genetically in their Indigenous heritage, as Mexican Americans tend to be more related to Mesoamerican groups, whereas New... 94bd530616 Before European contact, the region was home to complex societies including the Ancestral Puebloans, Mogollon, and later Pueblo peoples, whose descendants continue to live in the area. In 1598, Spain established one of the northernmost provinces of its empire in North America, centered on Santa Fe, making it one of the oldest continuously governed regions in the present-day United States. Colonial rule was marked by missionary activity, cultural exchange, and resistance, most notably the Pueblo Revolt, in which Indigenous peoples temporarily expelled Spanish authorities. Following Mexican independence in 1821, New Mexico became a remote northern territory of Mexico, developing trade links with the United States via routes such as the Santa Fe Trail.
