The song is a contemporary version of a classic worship song expressing "10,000 reasons for my heart to find" to praise God. The inspiration for the song came through the opening verse of Psalm 103: "Praise the Lord, my soul; all my inmost being, praise his holy name". It is also based on the 19th century English hymn "Praise, My Soul, the King of Heaven" written by Henry Francis Lyte. 4602b33461 == Reception == 4602b33461 == God Bless You, Mr. Rosewater == 4602b33461 God Bless You, Mr. Rosewater, or, Pearls Before Swine, the first of Vonnegut's

4602b33461 Over the decades, the song has become an enduring cultural staple, often cited as an unofficial national anthem of the United States. It has been a common feature at political and labor rallies, as well as sports events, most notably during the seventh-inning stretch at Major League Baseball games. Its history is marked by shifting societal interpretations: once a symbol of unity and religious tolerance in the 1940s, it was increasingly adopted by political conservatives during the 1960s to counter secular liberalism and anti-war sentiment.

The government held a competition to decide what would be the new national anthem to replace the British national anthem "God Save the Queen".

"God Bless our Sunny Clime" was one of the entrants to the contest. Whilst "March on, Bahamaland" was selected as the winner and would become the official anthem for the new Commonwealth of the Bahamas, "God Bless our Sunny Clime" came in second in the contest and it was decided by the government that it would be adopted as the Bahamas' national song. "God Save the Queen" would be retained solely as the Royal anthem of the Bahamas.
