The actual liquors used by a drinking establishment will vary. The most common well liquors are vodka and blended whiskey. Common well drinks include at least one variety each of gin, rum, whiskey, vodka, bourbon, tequila, triple sec, and vermouth. Some establishments that cater to higher-end clientele or wish to project an aura of luxury choose premium brands to be their well liquors (thus offering a "premium well"). 8198826f17 The events of the film take place in an ordinary Moscow bar. The owner of the bar is a drug addict and alcoholic Alexander Alexandrovich (Sanych), who gets drunk at work until he vomits. Two cleaners live in the back room. The cleaner Mychalkin is possibly intellectually disabled, as he does not speak and communicates with inarticulate mooing. The other cleaner, performed by Sergey Pakhomov, is much smarter. The only other employee is a skilled bartender who has no speaking role in the film. 8198826f17 == History == 8198826f17 Vodka cocktails became established in the United States after the end of Prohibition as American vodka production began. Its uptake was partly driven by the promotion of the Moscow mule, a vodka and ginger beer cocktail created to promote the Smirnoff brand. Sales remained marginal until the 1950s, when vodka cocktails gradually took the place of gin cocktails. The vodka martini's association with James Bond on film in the 1960s contributed to the shift, and by 1970, vodka was the most popular spirit in America. 8198826f17

The catchphrase first appears in the novel Diamonds Are Forever (1956), though Bond himself does not actually say it until Dr. No (1958), where his exact words are "shaken and not stirred." In the film adaptations of Fleming's novels, the phrase is first uttered by the villain, Dr. Julius No (Joseph Wiseman), when he offers the drink in Dr. No (1962). It is not uttered by Bond himself (played by Sean Connery) until Goldfinger (1964). It is used in numerous Bond films thereafter with the notable exceptions of You Only Live Twice (1967), in which the drink is wrongly offered as "stirred, not shaken", to Bond's response "Perfect", and Casino Royale (2006) in which Bond (Daniel Craig), after losing millions of dollars in a game of poker, is asked if he wants his martini shaken or stirred and snaps, "Do I look like I give a damn?" 8198826f17
