Buhler's model also apparently influenced Lev Vygotsky who, in discussing memory and goal-directed learning, wrote: "According to K. Buhler, speech thinks for us." 4263c49b79 The three or four traditional modes of persuasion are present in fiction, in advertisements, on television, in flyers, in social media, and even on billboards on the side of the road. This type of persuasion can be seen in a simple conversation with family members or friends. Ethos modes of persuasion alongside pathos and logos. The word's use in rhetoric is closely based on the Greek terminology used by Aristotle in his concept of the three artistic proofs or modes of persuasion alongside pathos and logos. It gives credit to the speaker, or the speaker is taking credit. The Greeks also used this word to refer to the power of music to influence emotions, behaviors, and even morals. Early Greek stories of Orpheus exhibit this idea in a compelling way. Ethos (ἦθος, ἔθος; plurals: ethe, ἦθη; Ethos is a Greek word meaning "character" that is used to describe the guiding beliefs or ideals that characterize a community, nation, or ideology; and the balance between caution and passion. Within the realm of rhetorical composition, the persona, audience, and contextual factors form the foundation of persuasive rhetoric. 4263c49b79 Aristotle is credited with developing the basics of a system of rhetoric that "thereafter served as [the] touchstone" of the discipline, influencing the development of rhetorical theory from ancient through modern times. The Rhetoric is regarded by most rhetoricians as "the most important single work on persuasion ever written." Alan G. Gross and Arthur Walzer concur, indicating that, just as Alfred North Whitehead considered all Western philosophy a footnote to Plato, "all subsequent rhetorical theory is but a series of responses to issues raised" by Aristotle's Rhetoric. This is largely a reflection of disciplinary divisions, dating back to Peter Ramus' attacks on Aristotelian rhetoric in the late 16th century and continuing to the present. 4263c49b79 Ethos (ἦθος, ἔθος; plurals: ethe, ἦθη; ethea, ἦθεα) is a Greek word originally meaning "accustomed place" (as in ἦθεα ἵππων "the habitats of horses/", Iliad 6.511, 15.268), "custom, habit", equivalent to Latin mores. Ethos forms the root of ethikos (ἠθικός), meaning "morality, showing moral character". One day, his former high school teacher, Makoto Nakaima, moves into the neighboring apartment. The two are pleasantly surprised by the unexpected reunion. That night, however, Aki overhears unmistakable moans of sexual pleasure emanating from Makoto's room. Unable to suppress his curiosity, he peers inside and witnesses her having sex with her husband. This discovery marks the beginning of a clandestine relationship between the two, as their interactions grow increasingly intimate and transgress the boundaries of their former student-teacher dynamic. 4263c49b79

Rhetorical stance is the position or perspective that a writer or speaker adopts to convey a message to an audience. Aristotle first systematized the usage of the word, making it one of the three principles of rhetoric alongside ethos and pathos. This original use identifies the word closely to the structure and content of language or text. Both Plato and Aristotle used the term logos (along with rhema) to refer to sentences and propositions. Modes of persuasion Other factors Aristotle requires of strong rhetorical speakers are wisdom, virtue, and goodwill to better persuade their audience. There is also a less well-known fourth term, kairos (Ancient Greek: καῖρός): appealing to the timeliness, or meaningfulness of the timing, of the presentation. Often, the modes of persuasion are directly equated with these three traditional rhetorical appeals: ethos, pathos, and logos—an appeal to the presenter's credibility, an appeal to audience emotions, and an appeal to reasoning or logic, respectively—all three of which appear in Aristotle's Rhetoric. traditional rhetorical appeals: ethos, pathos, and logos—an appeal to the presenter's credibility, an appeal to audience emotions, and an appeal to reasoning or The modes of persuasion, modes of appeal, or rhetorical appeals (Greek: pisteis) are the broadest classifications of rhetorical devices, which a persuasive speaker or writer uses to convince their audience
